

What are Collective Investment Trusts (“CITs”)?

CITs in general are tax-exempt, pooled investment vehicles sponsored and maintained by a bank or trust company who also serves as the trustee. CITs combine assets from eligible investors into a single investment portfolio (or “fund”) with a specific investment strategy. By commingling, or pooling, assets, sponsors of CITs may take advantage of economies of scale to offer lower overall expenses. The sponsoring trustee provides an additional level of risk management, and today’s CITs offer more innovative investment opportunities than in the past. These investments are typically only available to defined contribution and defined benefit plans.

Why Choose a Collective Investment Trust?

Lower Fees

CIT fees and expenses are generally lower than mutual fund fees. Because CITs are exempt from the registration and filing requirements of the Securities Exchange Commission (SEC) and independent boards are not required, they generally have lower administrative costs. They are however subject to oversight by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), Department of Labor and IRS.

Use of Investment Managers

CIT trustees are responsible for selecting investment managers, also referred to as sub-advisors, to manage the assets in the trust based on the specific investment strategy for that trust. CIT trustees can also delegate the selection and monitoring of sub-advisors to a designated 3rd party. The bank, trust company or designated 3rd party, are ERISA 3(38) fiduciaries for the selection and monitoring of the investment sub-advisors used in the CITs. This relieves the plan sponsor from the responsibility of hiring or removing investment managers and lessens the associated operational considerations. For instance, when a sub-advisor is removed and replaced the plan does not have to go through a blackout or pay for the expense of notifications to the plan participants.
